in a dark wood, for the straight way was lost.”

Out of the Dark Wood

Dante Rediscovered for Modern Audiences

The Pilgrim

In 2016, at 35, I was in a dark place. Then I discovered Yale's open course, Dante in Translation. Like many, I had dismissed The Divine Comedy as “revenge fantasy”. But Giuseppe Mazzotta's lectures revealed something deeper; urgent and morally alive. It felt like a call to creatives like me, to use our gifts, not to escape, but to illuminate the moral landscape and help guide others through the dark wood.

Going Deeper

Inspired, I looked for a podcast to supplement the course but what I found was either unstructured, low-quality, or too surface-level. Scholars aren't always storytellers—nor do they have access to professional creative tools. So I did what entrepreneurial creatives do: I filled the vacuum and made one myself.

The Designer

As a Senior Multimedia Designer specializing in e-learning and corporate compliance, I know how to diligently research and break down complex ideas for Fortune 500 clients—whether it's SEL courses for students K-12, or clinical training materials.

The Storyteller

As an indie author, songwriter, artist, and “Renaissance Man”, I frequent those imaginative spaces Dante knew only creative people could describe. My personal work uses allegory, fantasy, and poetry to tackle complex topics of morality in the modern world.

I am compelled to tell stories that matter, which is why I started Dante's History. Dante called us to find meaning in the moral journey. This project is my way of answering.
